

Model Introduction

Some people in society are paid vast amounts of money, while others are paid very little. This is unfair and there should be a salary cap on the highest paid earners.

Many countries' economies have grown rapidly over the last fifty years. This has benefited all people in society, but some people have benefited far more than others. Nowadays, certain occupations, such as bankers and footballers are paid vast sums of money, which many people argue is unfair. It will be argued that in order to make society fairer we need to cap the income of the highest earners. The essay will begin by discussing the arguments made about allowing people to earn large sums before justifying the reasons for capping salaries.